Shining a Light on Good Sleep

The world is waking up to the fact that getting enough sleep is vitally important for health, but should all sleep be considered equal?

Researchers have found that 40 percent of people sleep with some kind of artificial light in their room. This is a worry, as new findings have shown that this is bad for your health and has been connected with an increased risk of diabetes and heart disease. Some participants in a study said that they prefer to have a light on in case they have to get up in the middle of the night. For others, the light came from an alarm clock they kept in the room, and some even slept with the TV on but set on a timer. They were all surprised to hear that this could be impacting their health.

Experts in sleep medicine acknowledged that for people living in busy cities, making their room completely dark is more challenging. For people in this situation, they recommended blackout curtains or wearing an eye mask. When asked why light was such an issue, the researchers said that even when sleeping, light can stimulate brain activity. This increased brain activity has been shown to lead to higher blood sugar levels compared to individuals who sleep in the dark. Higher blood sugar levels have been associated with a higher risk of illness so keeping this regulated is important for good health.

End Procrastination Now!

'Procrastination' means putting tasks off, usually until the last minute. This can add stress to your life, especially if they're important tasks with a specific deadline. While it's often hard to get everything done in a timely manner, a regular routine can help. Here are some tips:

1. Write tasks down on a To-Do list or use an online project manager. Put the tasks that are most important at the top of your list - not the ones you enjoy doing the most - and make your way down the list. Remember to include due dates, too.
2. Use 'Work-Rest' phases. Work steadily for 20 minutes, stop for 5-10 minutes, then repeat. Be laser-focused on the task at hand during the 'Work' phase, but then recharge and reset.
3. Take longer breaks between fully completed tasks. Use these breaks for hobbies or some social interaction to feed your soul and provide an easy and natural way to relieve stress.

These simple tips will help you stay on track without feeling overwhelmed. Remember that when we're stressed, it often affects how we think and that will reflect in our work. We often realize far too late that pushing ourselves beyond our mental capabilities results in not only poor output and quality, but we end up taking longer to do simple tasks because we aren't giving ourselves a chance to recharge.

44. What is a problem caused by procrastination?

1. It can affect your mood and the quality of your work.
2. It takes more than 20 minutes to complete tasks.
3. It leads to writing lists with deadlines which cause more stress.
4. It is hard to complete in a timely manner.

45. Which of the following advice would the article agree with?

1. Listen to your favorite band while you work. A good mood helps your work.
2. When doing household chores, do the easy ones first.
3. Set a timer and get to work. When the timer goes off, go for a short walk.
4. Complete several tasks back to back. The earlier you finish the better.

46. What is the main goal of this article?

1. To explain procrastination and increase awareness of it.
2. To provide people with the tools they need to get more done.
3. To help people reduce stress through mindfulness practices.
4. To help people push themselves beyond their mental capabilities.

'Smart' vs 'Dumb'

- A: Today, I will be interviewing Bill Matthews. Last year, Bill decided to part with his smartphone. Good morning Bill and welcome to the show.
- B: Good morning. It is a pleasure to be here.
- A: So, Bill. Is it true that you no longer use a smartphone?
- B: That's right, and it has improved my life. I still have a phone, but it's a 'dumbphone,' like the ones from years ago.
- A: A dumbphone. Interesting. What can it do?
- B: Naturally, it can still make calls and send short text messages, but there's no internet connection, no email, and no apps.
- A: No apps. How do you monitor your social media, check train times, or quickly check for local coffee shops?
- B: True, it is more challenging, but you just have to prepare a little more before you leave the house. People survived without Smartphones for years. It is still possible.
- A: But why would you give up all of that convenience?
- B: Many reasons, actually. It's much cheaper for one. The phones only cost around $15 and the batteries last around one week on a single charge., Also, the data is only around $4 a month.
- A: But what about having so much information at your fingertips?
- B: The negative side of that is the constant distractions. Emails, app notifications, video sites, and games. I have more free time and can concentrate more easily on my work now. I also feel much calmer.
- A: Are you an outlier, or is this a growing trend?
- B: Well, over a billion dumbphones were sold last year, up from 400 million in 2019. I would say that dumbphones are gaining ground.
- A: This is definitely something to think about. Personally, though, I don't think I'll be making the change anytime soon!

47. Why is Bill Matthews being interviewed?

1. He collects phones and has many old ones.
2. He is arguing that it is better to be dumb than smart.
3. He monitors social media trends around phone sales.
4. He is using a technology that was popular in the past.

48. Bill Matthews most likely places a lot of value on being able to...

1. use his time wisely.
2. distract himself when he's bored.
3. feel confident in the information he shares.
4. share information with his friends.

49. Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a benefit of Bill Matthew's phone?

1. It is cheaper than modern phones.
2. It makes it easier to make long phone calls.
3. It helps you feel more relaxed throughout the day.
4. It helps you work more effectively.

50. Which of the following sentences is true according to the interview?

1. Phones like Bill's are dying out.
2. Bill can use his phone to check for parking lots in the area.
3. The interviewer won't follow Bill's decision.
4. Phones like Bill's help people stay up to date with the news.

THIS IS THE END OF THE TEST.
